

If we want different futures, we need different stories. What kind of stories and storytellers are you missing (dreaming of)?

Storytellers, that inhabit different worlds at once, making all of us richer for it

!#*&!$

feminist narratives

Innovation needs to be more social

I miss friendly ones, at times.

Kids

Stories from people who live in the forests. Of those who would not know how to operate a computer or shiny screen device

Global South representatives. Indigenous cosmovisions.

intellectuals who have the originality of proposing answers

If we want different futures, we need different stories. What kind of stories and storytellers are you missing (dreaming of)?

Stories of joy, lust and passion for everything that we share on this planet sources of meaning that are not (de)meaning to spiritual and emotional needs

holistic science

I dream of we can live and move to everywhere without national borders and visas things. I dream of we won't have nationalities, we are just the humans with robots' memories which could last forever. And we can really be free!

Rosemunder Pilcher movies goes queer

Ursula K. Le Guin, Frantz Fanon... and fortunately we still have Marge Piercy and many others

Stories written by those and about those we consider to be too boring for the art context: those beings around us whose lives are so difficult to describe as they seem to be familiar. which they are not, if you look closely.

!#*&!$

Stories of hope, inclusive stories, stories that don't take themselves too seriously, stories that unify micro and macro perspectives, stories that shake us and move us towards embracing human-nonhuman entanglements.

If we want different futures, we need different stories. What kind of stories and storytellers are you missing (dreaming of)?

Young politicians with clear and strong visions

we need more queer stories

Paul Preciados utopias are really good food for thought, imagination, emotion and spirit

Storytellers from the future that will comeback and warn us or give us secret clues on how to change evil plans of the present or simply teach us how to live with less resources and be more connected to nature. I dream of future prophets.

More Her-Stories

Peace

affective narratives

Cats, dogs, etc. domestic or feral coexisting human public and private spaces.

Von Gin gut

If we want different futures, we need different stories. What kind of stories and storytellers are you missing (dreaming of)?

Indigenous stories. Stories of people who bear knowledge of land and coexistence in their bodies. Stories of people whose world already ended. Because they are still here!

Decentralized government- after capitalism we changed things very dramatic - we decided that all citizens must be able to vote about everything , from now we don't need representative- decentralized government story by RandomLikeU

We need stories that enable people to sense the complex world we are living in and that empowers them to join the discussion on urgent matters. Therefore we need a global mutual understanding on what is urgent. Then these stories need to be heard.

I miss stories which are struggling, stories that are open, unsure, offering many paths and all of them right/wrong. I miss collective stories without heroic egos. I miss stories which are not sentimental and manipulative.

Let's hear more stories told by children like in the Melanie Bonajo film!

emotional stories